PITTSBURGH

The PNC Financial Services Group (NYSE: PNC) today announced it is a "Founding Partner" with the Pittsburgh Steelers and Heinz Field. Under the agreement, PNC Bank will provide nine automated teller machines and special offers that will enable only PNC customers to show their true Steelers colors with their debit card and other banking products.

"PNC has had a great relationship with the Steelers and the Rooney family for more than 50 years," said James E. Rohr, PNC's chairman, president and chief executive officer. "This is teamwork between two of Western Pennsylvania's most respected organizations, both of which are successful, national brands in their industries -- PNC as a leading financial services company, and the Steelers as one of the best and most popular NFL franchises."

"We are proud to once again have PNC Bank as `The Official Bank of the Pittsburgh Steelers," said Steelers President Dan Rooney. "PNC has been very supportive of our organization and, just as importantly, of our fans and the Western Pennsylvania region as well."

Scoring Points with Customers

Rohr said PNC's "Founding Partner" status and marketing agreement with the Steelers will bring valuable name recognition to the PNC brand. "With guaranteed soldout attendance at Heinz Field and large TV audiences locally and nationally, we will enhance awareness of PNC as a national franchise and as one of Pittsburgh's leading corporations."

Besides receiving recognition as a "Founding Partner" of Heinz Field, PNC's agreement with the Steelers also includes:
